The student who wrote the article in the ajc is planning on speaking in public comment tomorrow. If so, has to have their parent with them (under the age of 18). If not - they can't speak... and the student's mom is a member of the Board of Electors... so.... she probably doesn't want to be in the limelight on this particular issue.

I never had an opportunity yesterday to prep the email to the AJC asking for a note at the bottom of that student's article. Do you still want that?

Definitely approach cautiously! One of the narratives still floating around is that the District shuts down opposing views.

It's a rule, David Owen. One we've needed to enforce before with the Wheeler name change group.

Don't misunderstand. I'm not favoring their speaking, just saying tact is in order.

Also, allowing a kid to speak denies a taxpaying adult the opportunity.

email draft to Eric Sturgis/AJC:

Hi Eric,

Thank you for considering our concerns about the Lassiter media center renovation. We read one of the Get Schooled Blog guest columns, "Cobb student: Censoring our reading lists does not protect us. It stunts us." Your readers may appreciate a note at the bottom that explains, in full transparency, the guest editorial was written by the daughter of a Cobb County democrat politician, who is being sued by the SPLC in a case related to the Cobb County School District.
